If These Walls Could Talk...

The humble wall steps up and takes centre stage with bold and unique coverings

No longer content to exist as a mere surfaces on which to display beautiful hangings, walls have finally come into their own as home beautifiers. Boutique design studio Tatum Singapore (tatumcompany.com) offers you the pick of several exquisite interiors collections, including the three brands – Studioart, de Gournay and Alexander Lamont – featured here. A statement wall, covered in unconventional materials from leather to plant matter, can be a high-impact mood-setter for any dwelling; dark wood or straw conjures a sense of seduction and intimacy, for instance, while soft metallic finishes introduce a futuristic, cool-if-not-clinical edge. Whatever your personality, the wall is definitely where it's at in 2017.

Skin Deep

We can attest to the tactile sensuousness of Studioart's Leatherwall coverings: now entering its 10th year in business, the Italian house's Vector Broken design was a centrepiece of L'Officiel Singapore's very own 10th anniversary Rated X party. Within just a decade, Nadia and Gianfranco Dalla Mese's innovations – rooted in the craftsmanship of the latter's family trade, leather tanning – have come to clad walls in locations as diverse as the World Trade Centre in China, Harrods in London and a mindboggling list of the world's top hotels. Offering dozens of Leatherwall tiles in geometric designs in tasteful palettes and variegated finishings, that offer hundreds of permutations of eye-catching, sophisticated arrangements depending on the decorator's fancy. Beautiful, and versatile to boot: who could ask for anything more?
